I have an array of objects, and a element that I want to check if it's in the array. The index of the element is always the same as the index of the object in the array. I.E. [1, 2, 3].include?(5) --> false It's been awhile since I've dabbled in Ruby, and I've been relying on 1 line solutions rather than OOP. I got as far as this: return return element in @items And I know that the method is returning a boolean so I know that element is getting included in an array. I just don't know how to check the boolean result... A: Try this: if @items.include?(element) # your code here end Flingable In-Ear Headphones The In-ear Headphones
